MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE COUNTESS DE MORNY.

The house was crowded to suffocation, the imperial box alone being unoccupied .-SWAN & CO., Managers of the Sparta Acad- The Count and Countess de Morny were pres ent; and, for the first time, the Paris public were admitted to judgment on the charms which have been so much vaunted in the north and east of Europe. The result of the examination is not wholly in confirmation of the wide-spread fame which these charms have acquired. The Countess' heauty is dacidedly of the petit genre -- soft, and not commanding-the great peculiarity of the sty e being the very dark eyes and the very fair hair. The contrast gives a singularity to the countenance, to which we "men of the west" are totally unaccustomed. The youthful Contess was most simply attired, with no ornament whatever in ber coiffeure, which consisted entirely of the plaits, torsades, and ringlets of her own magnificent hair. Great disappointment was experienced in conse quence, as the contemplation of the splendid ewels, said to have been bestowed by the Emperor on her wedding, might be reckoned for a large share in the curiosity with which her presence was greeted. Much has been said of the dazzling whiteness of the lady's pearly teeth; but, on the evening in question, no opportunity was afforded for their display, as she did not once open her lips to utter a single word during the whole evening .- Paris correspondence of the Court Journal. Another Paris correspondent says: Madame de Morny, it is now quite certain does not "take" in Paris, and, as yet fashion decides against ber. She is too little, and the strangeness of her pale, flaxen hair, with ber inky, dark eyes, astonishes, but fails to please, the capricious Parisian society. Besides she is said to be disagreeable and illbred; and, added to all this, she has a rival who carries everything before her and who is the Queen of Beauty for this season, Madame Korsakoff, a Russian also, who certainly is magnificently handsome, and on a grandly-developed scale. THE LATE EARTHQUAKE IN NAPLES. The latest accounts from Naples give the names of 16 other townships, hitherto unnamed, which have suffered severely by the late terrible earthquake. Of these, it is said, some are a mass of ruins; others leveled with the ground; others almost entirely destroyed -churches, dwelling-houses and all; in some, workmen are pulling down the houses, and in others large fissures are opened in the ground. Out of those 46 places, 20 are reported to have lost some portion of their population; of one, it is said, 100 corpses have been taken out, of another 70, and it is expected that 300 will be found. It is believed that what have been called the exaggerations of the public, much more nearly approximate to the truth than the scanty and uncertain information communicated by the official accounts .-According to it, 3,655 bodies have already been dug out, a fearful number to think of, to which, if are added the "moltissimi periti," the number of whom is as yet unknown, we Do do do 10 half do 49 00 shall not be very much startled at the medi-Do do do 10 quarter do 20 00 um statement given of about 13,000 or 14,000
